in the Central Market, Fifty-sixth street 74,524. Shipments, 52,988; average ship- and Sixth avenue, was sentenced to serve thirty days in the workhouse for tearing War Savings Stamps, Red Cross and other American war posters from the outside walls of the market by Magistrate Harris in the Yorkville police court

"I would give you six months if I were satisfied that you did that in the interests of the enemy of this country. These Government posters must be respected." Genett denied he had torn down the posters and said that he had only torn off their edges, as he had been ordered to remove them.

John Genett, 38, a watchman employed
